Study Title: Modern Course Exemplars infused with Parallel and Distributed Computing for CS1 & CS2

We are interested in improving students' knowledge of parallelism and distribution in CSC 1300 Introduction to Problem Solving and Computer Programming and CSC 1310 Data Structures. Your role as a participant in this study would include allowing de-identified data from several surveys/reports to be used in study results published to the computer science community.

All information taken from the study will be coded to protect your name. No personally identifiable information will be included with your data and your identity will be fully protected. Once the data has been fully analyzed, it will be destroyed.

All students will be completing the surveys and programming aptitude test as part of the CSC 1300 required class activities but only those who agree to participate in the study will have their deidentified data be included in the study. There is no additional time requirement by participating in the study. Allowing your data to be included in the study will allow us to determine the success of the study and will potentially help future Computer Science students taking this course.

Your participation in this research is voluntary. You have the right to withdraw at any point during the study by filling this form out again and selecting "I do not consent." The Principal Investigator of this study, Dr. Gerald Gannod, can be contacted via email at jgannod@tntech.edu or phone, 931-372-3691, if you should have any questions about this research study. The Co-Principal Investigator, April Crockett, will download the informed consent form data after the semester has ended. The professor of the class, April Crockett, will not know which students have chosen to participate and which have not until the semester has ended.

For additional information about giving consent or your rights as a participant in this study, to discuss problems, concerns, and questions, or to offer input, please feel free to contact the Institutional Review Board chairperson at 931-372-3171 or the Office of Research at 931-372-3374
